11/13

This week was a little shakier than previous weeks. I struggled to find the time to work on the capstone amid the increasingly prescient college application process. However, there have been some developments and continuations with the project. One unfortunate roadblock that inhibited my progress this week was that no one at Valley Village signed up for a technology session this week. While I understand that it was Veterans day in the middle of the week, which could have changed some of their plans for tech help, I have to hope that this doesn't become a pattern. If it does, I will have to develop action steps to ascertain people's awareness and want for the service that I am providing in the building.

The surveys have been written, expanded upon, and are ready to send out. I will be providing them to the Newfane Library patrons and volunteers, along with a Valley Village staff specific survey, that I hope to hand out when I am next over there next week. Moreover, next week I will be meeting with the Townshend Library directors and trustees in their monthly meeting to discuss how I can facilitate and program their "Tech Hour" event that they have expressed interest in creating. I believe that they have few ideas on what this technology help hour would look like, so I will be spending some upcoming time working on some ideas to propose to them that may be helpful towards the community. Hopefully, I will be able to work-in my survey into this tech hour, and gain some more insight into community issues with technology.

The literature review didn't get a lot of progression, as other writing assignments for college took up lots of my time. I hope to spend some more time on it next week, and hopefully have a draft done to be shared by the end of the month.

Shared in the Portfolio folder is a PDF version of the two surveys that I will be offering.
